What do think about the way languages are taught in schools?

As far as I'm concerned, the methods used to teach foreign languages in schools are in need of improvement. Teachers need to engage students more with interesting materials and fun activities with real-life conversations in that language. It is widely believed that teaching just grammar or lecture-based lessons is not effective and I agree with this. For example, when I was in school, I didn't like French class as the teacher just lectured and there were no fun group activities.

همچنین استفاده از Conditional Sentences ایده خوبی در هنگام پیشبینی است، مانند جمله کاربردی اسپیکینگ آیلتس زیر:

If technology continues to progress at this pace, then it is highly likely that teachers in the classroom will be replaced by computers or robots in the future.

Will computers and robots replace teachers in the future?

I reckon it's highly likely that robots and computers will be used in schools rather than teachers. If technology continues to progress at this pace, then I can definitely see that teachers in the classroom will not be needed in the future. For instance, I recently read a report in the Guardian newspaper that Japan is planning to put robots in English classrooms to help pupils with their pronunciation, so yes there is a strong possibility that robots will be doing the job of a teacher within 10 years.

Talking about other people

Do people in your country spend a lot of money on their education?

I would say that the majority of people spend a lot on education. Traditionally in my country, studying hard to get into a good university is considered to be very important. For instance, most people want to get a job as a Doctor or some other high paying profession, therefore, many people tend to see investing in their education as a big priority.

What is the difference between studying online and studying at a school?

Studying on the internet such as an online course is more effective than studying at school, because we can focus more without the distractions of being in a class. We can also study at our own pace and with recent advances in technology, it is often much cheaper to study online than at a school. For instance, if you want to learn English it will be more expensive to enroll in a school than studying through YouTube videos or taking a Skype lesson.

Making comparisons with the past

How are education priorities today different from those in the past?

Used to: Universities used to be free in the UK but now students are getting into debt.

Present perfect: The quality of teaching has become much better compared to 50 years ago.

Present perfect continuous: Education has been getting more expensive over the past 20 years.

Past simple: Teaching was a well-paid profession in the past, but nowadays it has one of the lowest salaries

Past continuous: Truancy was becoming a big problem when I was in school, although these days it seems to not be such an issue.

How are education priorities today different than those in the past?

Many years ago, teaching was about rote learning and the pupils used to listen to the teacher in a lecture format. In recent years in the western world especially, there has been more of a focus on individualism and critical thinking skills. For example, when I was in high school, I remember the teacher was writing up stuff on the blackboard with no group discussion among the class. These days the classroom is a very different place.

Many school children are doing badly at school. This is down to various issues, bullying, boredom, and poor teaching methods. As a result, the pupils are not getting the grades they need to go to university.

What are some of the reasons for students doing badly in school?

I reckon that this is down to a number of issues, among these are poor teaching methods, boredom and lack of motivation. This means that many students are not getting the grades they need to enter University. For instance, when I was at school, I had to study geography and science but I had no interest in those subjects. Also, I realized that the teaching methods in my school were not so good. Due to this I completely lost interest in those subjects and got poor grades too.
